PREFACE.

I hate explanations. To me the crudest pencil-sketch means more than volumes of discussion, and I should like to feel assured that the following pages need no long commentary to make clear their excuse for existence. In them I have tried to give a convenient guide to the mass of literature the magazines have published concerning the acted drama and the men and women directly connected with it. Like the city directory, this guide gives no information in the concrete, but tells how and where that information may be found,—also, by whom it is given, and, in many cases, when it was issued. Such, in the main, is the scope of the present publication.

There are, however, a few features of the work that justify particular notice, as, for instance, the arrangement of matter according to writers as well as subjects. In this age, when the names of writers often count for nearly as much as what is written, circumstances can easily be conceived in which it may be of value to know what, on this subject, any particular writer, actor, or manager has said. This system also discloses the fact that many good men have had a good word to say for the drama.

It has been necessary to limit the scope thus outlined to articles on the acted drama; that is, that portion of the drama that has or has had a stage history. Magazine farces and stories in which the scenes or characters are theatrical but fictional, excellent as these may be, do not come within the limit, nor do the bright, interesting "Dramatic Departments" of the minor magazines and daily and weekly papers.

Dealing, as the present work does, with a special topic, it has been possible to divide the individual subjects more minutely and exactly than could be done in a general index, yet I should be ungrateful and insincere not to acknowledge my indebtedness to — I am almost willing to say dependence upon — the "Poole" and the "Fletcher" Indexes to Periodical Literature, one of the most valuable series of books this century has produced.

It is with pleasure that I acknowledge the courtesy of the late Dr. Poole's family, of Mr. William I. Fletcher, of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and of Mr. R. R. Bowker, in consenting to the adoption in this work of the lines and methods pursued in "Poole's Index."
